Project annotation

In Europe, examinational and therapeutic approaches used in physical therapy in patients with neurological diseases often appear significantly different. While there is general agreement that rehabilitation plays an important role in maintaining and improving of their function, no consensus exists on what examination system and therapeutic approach is the most effective. From literature and previous co-operation follows that Czech and Norway Health Care systems differ significantly. There are two conceptually different physiotherapeutic approaches: facilitation approach represented by Czech partners and task - oriented approach represented by Norwegian partners. Two scientific workshops for students and academic/scientific staff on topic of Neurorehabilitation (first realized at Third faculty of Medicine, Charles University in Prague and the second at University of Oslo) were organized to give the opportunity to present different approaches in neurorehabilitation and improve education.
